

Signing on for club racing — a quick reminder

Yesterday's club racing saw a paper sign-on sheet appear on the noticeboard after a handful of sailors reported trouble with the tablet. Once it was up, plenty of others reached for the pen too. Understandable in the moment — but it causes real problems downstream, and it isn't the process set out in our club racing Sailing Instructions.

Here's how signing on should work.

First time in a series: enter once

Before you can sign on for individual races, you need to enter the series. You only do this once per series:

1. Follow this link: <https://sailevent.net/events/hisc/club>
2. Or, from the HISC website, click the race on the main calendar (each one is hyperlinked): <https://hisc.co.uk/club-calendar/main-calendar/>. You can filter the calendar to show club racing only.
3. If neither of those works, ask a fellow sailor to help you enter — or, if reception is open, ask the receptionist kindly to enter you for the series.

Every race after that: sign on digitally

Once you're entered in the series, signing on for each race is a few taps — either on the club tablet at the official club racing noticeboard, or from your own phone if you signed up to sailevent with your email address.

Why this matters

Digital sign-on isn't red tape. It lets the race officer see, live from the racebox, exactly who is out on the water. It means safety boats can be stood down correctly at the end of the day, without anyone wondering whether a sailor has been missed. And — the bit that benefits you most — results go out quickly and accurately. Paper sheets slow everything down, and honestly, I can't always read the handwriting.

While you're at it: log in to your SailEvent account

We'd encourage all club racers to get familiar with logging into their SailEvent account. Once you're in, you can update your own sail number and class details whenever they change — no need to email us and wait.
